

Upgrading from Excel to Contract Insight Contract Management Software

Managing Contracts Just Got Easier! Relationships are key in the professional world. When you've found a good accountant, lawyer, or electrician, you are likely to stick with them for a long period of time. They are each specialists in their field. The same rings true for operating systems and software applications. Raise your hand if you have been using Microsoft Office for the past twenty years? Thirty years?

Among the most popular Microsoft Office Applications in the business world is Microsoft Excel. It's no wonder why, as the popular spreadsheet application can be leveraged for everything from math homework to word processing. Simple equations to managing our contracts. We become accustomed to the jack-of-all trades application. We have the accountant writing our wills and replacing our toilets. It's a scary proposition.

I'd like to take a look at one of the examples above. Contract Management is a profession as old as ink and quill. Contract Management professionals such as you are depended on from small businesses to the world's largest organizations. Why risk using Excel to managing your contracts—risking the potential of missed expiration dates and renewals? What seems like a free and convenient contract management solution (due to its inclusion in Office), can quickly become an expensive and inconvenient headache.

CobbleStone has been offering Contract Management Software since 1995—two years after the first Excel application—and we have been helping its users ever since. We understand the frustrations of using excel to manage contracts and we have developed the solution. We at CobbleStone offer the ability to upload your excel spreadsheets, automatically including them into a centralized repository with advanced e-mail notification alerts, web calendaring, tasks with escalation rules, and more. No more paging through complicated Excel spreadsheets to find an expiration or renewal date.

It all comes down to time. Imagine the ability to easily search your contracts as well as within the documents with our included full-text indexing in a matter of seconds. We encounter people in your position on a daily basis and would love the opportunity to speak to you about how we can make your life easier.
